In ACTION

On a moonless night, two helicopters fly to the country Pakistan. They carry a team of Navy SEALs. The choppers fly toward a building. One of the United States' most wanted criminals is hiding inside.

The soldiers plan to sneak inside the building. But the mission goes wrong. One of the choppers hits the building. The element of surprise is gone. But the SEALs know just what to do.

Mission Accomplished

Working together, the SEALs fight their way inside the building. They climb a staircase and find their target. They shoot. They kill. The soldiers then board choppers. They fly out of Pakistan. The mission is complete.

Who Are the Navy SEALs?

Navy SEALs are highly trained U.S. soldiers. They are called in to stop dangerous enemies. They sneak into enemy territory to gather information. When a job seems impossible, SEALs jump to action.

The first two SEAL teams officially formed in 1962. Over time, more teams developed. Now, many SEAL teams perform missions around the world.

The name SEAL comes from where the soldiers work. It stands for sea, air, and land.
